Ms. Renata B. Hesse,

This letter is in reference to the antitrust suit against Microsoft. It appears to be that Microsoft will only get a slap on the wrist for their actions against the IT industry and our economy. It has been proven in court that the corporation hurts competition, hinders innovation, over charges for their products, as well as markets flawed and insecure software. How will the Department of Justice of the United States of America represent the people if Microsoft will not be broken up into smaller companies? Since the break-up option has been removed, Microsoft has shown its aggressive, monopolistic character. It would be in the best interest of the economy and for the reputation of the Department of Justice that Microsoft is severely punished for it's crimes. Otherwise, the people of this great nation will lose confidence in our judicial system. Please remember that this is the same company that used fraudulent video tapes under oath in court. This corporation lacks any code of ethics. I wish that no preference be given to them, as I expect no preference be given to me shall I make the mistake of committing of any crimes.

Sincerely,
Stephen Thomas
